

Havasupai Falls is just one of several majestic waterfalls found on the Havasupai Reservation that are anywhere from 75 to 200 feet (22.9 to 76 m) high. While you will not see the amazing vistas Grand Canyon is known for, you will experience some of the most beautiful waterfalls in the United States. This is the perfect hike for novice adventurers, a family vacation or a getaway with a group of friends. We set up base camp at Havasu Creek and spend our free days exploring the area and swimming by waterfalls.

Our Havasupai Falls tour will take you through the village of Supai, which is inhabited by the Havasupai Indians, and then on to a campground where we spend a few nights under the stars next to the bustling Havasu Creek. All of our hiking tour options allow you plenty of time to explore Havasupai Falls, the 198-foot Mooney Falls, and the two new falls created by the 2008 flood.

Day 1

Our tour begins in Phoenix or Flagstaff. We head to the trailhead at Hualapai Hilltop. Once we arrive, we will hike 10 miles (16.1 km) to the campground and descend about 2,200 ft (670.6 m). The hike to the campground takes about 5 hours and along the way we pass through the village of Supai, which has a post office, general store and cafe. In fact, Supai is the most remote village in the USA with access only by foot, horse or helicopter (we access it by foot).

Day 2

Today is spent exploring the four waterfalls in the area: Havasu, Mooney, Rock Falls and the new Navajo Falls. The last two falls were created in the flood of 2008. There are plenty of places to swim and great scenery around every corner. We may also head into the village of Supai for a lunch of Indian Tacos (this is optional and not included in package price). Total hiking distance for the day is around 5 to 7 miles (8 to 11.3 km).

Day 3

We follow the same trail we came in, but this time we head up 2,200 ft (670.6 m) over 10 miles (16.1 km). The hike up is relatively gradual until the last 1.2 miles, which we take slow and easy. Once we pack up the vehicles, the group is welcome to join the guides for lunch in the Route 66 town of Seligman, AZ. Lunch is optional and not included in the package price.
